FUND MANAGER COMMENTARY AT 28 FEB 2018

The dominant effect on the portfolio was once again the Rand which continued to strengthen through February.

US bonds have also continued the sell off with the US 10 year bond peaking around 2.94% before recovering to 2.84% at month end. Our low duration strategy insulated us from most of these effects.

The enthusiasm for emerging markets in general has helped to keep the asset class well supported. Credit spreads are currently low against historic norms. We feel that this is warranted in the context of the improving fundamentals that we are seeing.

The effect of the strong rand however caused the portfolio to report a small loss.

MARKET COMMENTARY

African countries (and corporates) are taking advantage of the appetite for Emerging Market assets. We have seen some significant issuance from Kenya in particular this month with them testing the market for 10 and 30 year bonds (we did not participate in the issues).

Stories of Transnet and Seaplat Petroleum (Nigeria) accessing the bond markets in the near term illustrate how access to debt is improving on the continent. (Again we have no intention of participating).

The major news of the month was from Kenya which was downgraded to B2 (stable) by Moody's on the back of concerns about escalating debt levels (61% of GDP) and questions about the debt affordability. We are comfortable with our exposure that is due for repayment in 2019.

Senegal has been in the news for the right reasons, signing an accord with Mauritania to jointly explore and develop offshore oilfields (though the countries are still disputing fishing rights). We are also pleased to see Senegal strengthening their relationships with Turkey and Malaysia during the month.

The Ethiopian Prime Minister surprised as he stepped down to create some new space at the top. Whilst the economic prospects of Ethiopia have been improving greatly, the ruling coalition has proved fragile. We see this as the likely end of the coalition with a period of political instability likely to ensue. Again we are comfortable with our position though we are keeping an eye on the developing situation.

We continue to favor commodity countries at the moment as the weaker dollar will likely keep commodity prices attractive. Overall we continue to hold that exposures in Ghana, Senegal, Nigeria and the Ivory Coast will out perform in the near term. We do maintain our diversified approach towards investing on the continent.
